WHAT HAPPENED - INTRO, ADVENTURE 2

- The Califano's house -

- The island folk live by separate laws - effectively, their own.

Carsityl law and enforcement does not extend to the islands realm. Because of this, island folk can act w/ impunity in Carsityl so long as they can successfully return to their islands. This is a great sport, particularly among young men, adventurous bravos, who often travel at night, usually to Carnavalle, where the looting and taking is easy. Young women are often targets, but wealth is not, as the island folk surround themselves w/ wealth.

The island realm is made up of hundreds of small & large islands filling the mer month, each the preserve of a family of the Realm. Together they make up a loose confederation called to Carsityl, letting in no outsiders. However, they are not particularly intoned. Many islands are deserted or hampered, but these remain so, enforced by Realm custom. These families have their seat usually in some ancient manse, usually loathed, w/ ancestral servant families. The only access is by water, and the Realm folk are adept at sailing and command many craft.

The young are trained as warriors and magicians, but never clerics, as the Realm is generally atheist. However, often seamen causes attract their attention. Adventurous life being at a premium, often the sons go off to adventure, to die or return endowed w/ magic. The ancient manses are said to be loaded w/ gold and magic, but also with danger and trouble. Few attempt to rob.

- Something akin to the great families of the Italian Renaissance city states

Situation: The daughter of a rich merchant & member of council has been kidnapped.

- He knows it was done by Calhoun braves & wants her back & them punished.

- He will pay skilled adventurers to recapture her & break her - he has a rough map
